Day 1

Session 1 : Global Economy and its Impact to Social Security

Undoubtedly global economy condition influences almost all aspect of human life. We have seen that in recent years, economic crises happened more frequents than the earlier years. The impacts of these crises were enormous, both positive and negative. Among others are the impacts on social security aspects, employment and people welfare. From this session, we will get some insights about shared prosperity and the global trend of employment. Moreover, we would have further knowledge about the present condition and the future of social security administration especially in Indonesia.

Session 2 : The Implication of Sharing Economy on Workers' Welfare

From the point of view of sharing economy, the world sees people gain access and circulate their goods in a whole new way. Although this concept remains to be blurry for some because of how extensive the range it covers, it keeps growing and growing in size. The concept it brought was considered to be a new way of economic platform. It offers more flexibility than its old sibling, the conventional economy. It is assumed that it's easier for people to gain access to it to do their economic transactions. Is the sharing economy the answer to stop the rampant spread of poverty? Is the sharing economy the answer to equalized welfare distribution? Is the sharing economy the answer to a better welfare for the workers? From this session, those issues would be addressed and discussed.

Session 3 : The Emerging of Sharing Economy and Its Influence on Workers' Protection

The characteristics of conventional and sharing economy is undoubtedly different. Nonetheless, the workers who involve either in the conventional or sharing economy have to be able to gain the same employment protection. The interesting question related to that issue is: Should the policies adjust to the business process in the sharing economy or vice versa? From this session, it is projected that we can find the answer to the question implied.

Day 2

Session 1 : Improving Social Security Awareness through Behavioral Changing Approach: Key Finding and Way Forward

Many times we have to realize that when we were too focused on the conventional approaches, sometimes we forget that there are many new methods that could be applied and could provide more satisfactory results. In social security, the struggle to cover workers, especially who work in informal sector, is real. When the conventional approaches showed unsatisfactory results, they triggered the utilization of new approaches. One of them is the approach from the behavioral insight. It is proven, even in the United State, that behavioral approach can boost the participation rate of the pension program. In this session, the success stories of behavioral approach in policy designs will be presented in the area of social security or other public services. It is hoped that from this session, policy makers, especially in developing countries, can start to look to behavioral approach to increase the participation rate of worker protection or other public policy implementations.

Session 2 : Reaching The Unreachable

When we are too busy dealing with what we can easily reach, then we are forgetting those who are unreachable. Many countries are still struggling to equalize the distribution of welfare for their people. From time to time, the unreachable find difficulties accessing what their government provides. From this session we will have some insights from best practices in some countries how they develop ways to give easiness to the unreachable to access the government welfare provision.

Session 3 : Formalizing The Informal

Informality is perceived as an economic challenge in most countries. Informal sector is a prominent characteristic in developing countries although it is also an issue that can not be ignored completely in developing countries. The complex characteristic of informal sector, makes the workers involve in this sector are harder in gaining access to social security mechanism. Nevertheless, more efforts have to be put in place to protect all the workers especially informal workers in term of social protection. This session will give us some insights of how the employment in informal sector beyond today and some best practices sharing of how to protect the workers of this sector.
