Identifies problems and concerns of employees through surveys <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Last December 2020, the GSIS conducted an online wellbeing survey to measure the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the mental health of employees. The results were used to determine the list of high risk employees who were offered counseling services and further interventions. It also led to the hiring of the in-house registered guidance counselor and the services of a psychologist consultant for the following year. ▪ In 2021, the GSIS then conducted the Mental Health Assessment Survey for all employees. This time, more specific mental health problems, and sources of maladjustments were determined. Interventions such as psychological first aid (PFA) and financial literacy programs were offered, giving priority to high risk individuals. ▪ In 2022, Employee Well-being and Satisfaction Survey was conducted to all employees. Results of the survey were distributed to each office/department. This will be the basis of the programs and activities that will be conducted by the GSIS this year. 2. Such service can be availed of through self-referrals, referrals of supervisors and invitations for those assessed as "high risk" employees. For employees who are not yet ready to disclose their concerns to their supervisors, counseling is done even during lunch breaks. Since the service was offered, there has been an upward trend in the number of counselees. It could mean success, at least for our objective to spread awareness on mental health. Collaboration with the client's immediate supervisor was also arranged to address their needs. Clients were asked to give their feedback and rate the quality of the sessions. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ▪ Assistance to employees who experienced crisis is offered through the Psychological First Aid (PFA). After the earthquake on July 27, 2022, online PFA were given to several distressed employees in the La Union and Tarlac Branches of the GSIS. ▪ Bahay Ginhawa in the Central Office is a safe space for those who are distressed and would be in much need of a quiet and relaxing surrounding. Its features include an area for reflection and relaxation, a room for employees in need of privacy in times of emotional pain, prayer areas and counseling room. The Bahay concept was approved
